We last chin-stroked our way through reviewing TomTom's sat nav app in December 2014, finding it a fine app, if maybe too expensive compared to its free - and mostly pretty sturdy - rivals. That was on iOS, but now, just a few months later, TomTom have double-upped the ante, with an updated Android-only (for now) app and a new and interesting pricing plan. So for once, your iPhone-packing chums can look over your shoulder enviously. Well, slightly enviously; it's only a sat nav. A new way of navigating. Although much about TomTom Go Mobile for Android is exactly as you'd expect, there's something new here: the pricing. Now pay attention, class. You get 50 free miles of navigation including TomTom Traffic and speed camera alerts every month, for free. So for a lot of users it'll be completely free. Although equally, of course, many users will find it's not. After your 50 miles is up, you have the option of taking out a one-year or three-year subscription to navigation, Traffic and speed camera updates - it's £14.99 for 1 year or £34.99 for three years. For most users, that will be considerably cheaper than the current app with Traffic and speed camera data. If you didn't use those services then it's still cheaper for the first two years and then, well, it's not. If you're a payment refusenik, you will still be able to use the app to browse the map, see traffic on the map, search for POIs and even plan routes, but you won't get turn-by-turn instructions until the month is up and you get another 50 miles of free navigation. It's a freemium app, in short. Oh, and if you have the previous Android app, you can upgrade to this for 50p - the minimum charge on the Google Play Store for an in-app purchase - inclusive of a three-year sub. Again, a decent deal. Features You'll find this in the Play store as "TomTom UK & Ireland" which is a misnomer as the app offers maps from all around the world, 111 in total - all your smartphone (and international data roaming contract) can eat, with speed camera support for the most popular 40. As the map is downloaded to your phone, you can route for free before setting off. There's the expected address search via address, point of interest or plucked from contacts. You can even add an address to a phone contact direct from the app, which is handy. Also very slick is a "contacts map" which shows all your contacts on one map: you then pinch zoom in to the pal you want to visit, and then set off. Any destination can be added to favourite routes with a poke. If only standalone satnavs made this so easy. Route planning can be tweaked via fastest, shortest, most eco-friendly, motorway avoiding and walking and cycling routes, with toll roads, carpool lanes, ferries and - randomly - unpaved roads avoided. As it's an app, tinkering to imprisonable levels of OCD is encouraged. If you're that person. "Serena" is your default navigator, but there's a selection of English, Aussie, American, Irish, Indian and New Zealand accents just a free download away. Load up your app and you're asked to download your map of choice. The UK map is 886Mb, so takes a minute or two to download over a wifi connection. Then plug a menu button and there's a nice, transparent UI overlaid over your current whereabouts. Performance Before you start, if you're attached to a network, your map flashes up real time, at-a-glance traffic information, including delays, so you can avoid any red bits. This is enormously helpful as you can pre-plan your route based on live traffic information. And a nice touch is the option to go straight to favourites from the boot screen. As it's a smartphone app, you can choose between portrait and landscape mode, although landscape mode adds a handy "route bar" that lists traffic incidents, speed cameras or petrol stations further ahead on your route on a y-axis that's scrollable. Once you're on the road, you'll find that at the bottom of the screen there's a continual reminder of how many miles you've got left, next to a huge "Upgrade" button. The maps are clear, concise and still pretty much best-in-class, with a calming, default robot lady easing you to your destination with well-judged directions. TomTom's class is often evident on Go Mobile for Android. The map zooms in to show your next turn, motorway exits and correct filter lanes are previewed and it's eternally nice to see you breezing past contacts on your map, if you're nearby. All told, it's the usual class TomTom app experience, with the usual caveat that a dedicated GPS is generally better at receiving the necessary signal and so less likely to get you lost in town. Verdict TomTom seems to have talked itself into an interesting corner with its innovative pricing structure. Regular sat nav users who, for whatever reason, don't have a standalone device may be prepared to pay a small amount every three years. Casual users, by their nature, will generally get it for free. So that's fine. But what about casual users who make the old longer journey - the kind where Google maps or a free sat nav app isn't sufficient? These, of course, will hover up your 50 free miles alarmingly quickly, and then you have to buy a one-year sub. Why isn't there a monthly option? On the other hand, a fee just shy of 15 quid may be low enough not to alienate that type of potential buyer. We'll see... We liked it a real boon that traffic alerts, which usually cost extra, are included, and the overall experience of using the TomTom Go Mobile for Android is good, apart from the effort it takes to write out its unwieldy full name. We're not sure why the graphics have got more cartoon-y on this pricing of the app, but it's not off-putting as much. We dislike'd feels like this is crying out for is a monthly purchase option for a pound or two, for when 50 miles isn't enough. We're sure TomTom's done its research, but it seems to us that a good GPS navigation app for Android. Even if the pricing is a bit baffling, we recommend it if you're an Android-toting fan of apps over standalone sat navs.TODAY'S BEST DEALS In this week's roundup we take a look at Google's new technology – Native Client, its Android phone, news from the world of web browsers and more. In news this week, Google uncovered its plans to introduce a new technology called Native Client to allow web applications to access a users' CPU. The company also announced that it is joining forces with Salesforce.com to integrate App Engine with Force.com. Developers can now get their hands on an Android phone from Google too. Over in the world of web browsers, Chrome is about to exit the beta stage. IE7 users are being warned of a new zero-day exploit, unintentionally made public by Chinese security researchers. A new web workers feature, which is a part of the HTML 5 specification, was introduced in the latest Firefox 3.1 beta 2 and allows browsers to process scripts in the background. From the blogs this week, Brendon Chase explored the possibility of webcams being the next input device and I looked at the new W3C mobileOK tool that has been released. In videos we showed five services to turn off in Windows Server 2003 and the worst predictions of 2008. In this handy tutorial, Chris Duckett shows you how to get started with Firefox extensions. –Posted by Lana Kovacevic By Gwendolen Akard i cellphone image by Balogh Eniko from Fotolia.com T-Mobile has many account features available online, but when the account is locked you can no longer access them. If you pay your bill online, this can mean your payment might be late. It is important to unlock your T-Mobile account after T-Mobile notifies you that it is locked, so you can see your usage, change any settings and pay for your service. Call T-Mobile customer service by dialing 611 from your T-Mobile phone, or 877-453-1304 from any other phone. Ask to speak with a representative, or follow the menu instructions until you can speak with one. Tell them your account is locked and that you wish to unlock it. Verify your identity when they ask for the last four digits of the primary account holder's Social Security number. If you are not the primary account holder, have the person who is speak to the representative. Wait for them to unlock your account. This should not take long. Verify that you can log into your online account before hanging up the phone. We've all suffered creative block, where you just can't work out how to move forward on a project. The normal course of action is to take a break: go for a walk, take the car out for a spin, phone your parents, watch an episode or 10 of Game of Thrones... then come back to the task later with a refreshed mind and new sense of energy. Sometimes, though, that doesn't work. Sometimes it's not just a question of giving your brain a rest, but finding new ways to get those creative muscles pumping again, like switching machines at the gym. These 8 quirky apps offer a way to do just that. We'd love to hear if you've used any of them yourself, and what you think of them: please let us know in the comments below!01. Google Sprayscape (opens in new tab)Create trippy VR photos with Google Sprayscape Dubbed a "perfectly imperfect VR-ish camera app", Google Sprayscape is an exciting new method of visual experimentation, and a great way to flex your creative muscles in new and unexpected ways. The free app uses your phone's gyroscope to take pictures on the inside of a 360-degree sphere. Just point your phone and tap the screen to spray what Google calls "digital paint" in any direction you want. There's nothing by the way of instructions, but it's all pretty intuitive.Google Sprayscape will often result in a blurry, incoherent mess, resembling a nightmare LSD trip in 360 degrees. But like most of the apps in this list, it's less about the end result than it is about the process, which is like throwing bursts of reality across a canvas as if it were paint. And yes, that's as fun as it sounds. 02. Tilt Brush (opens in new tab)VR painting art created by artist Drew Skillman using Tilt Brush Another Google app, Tilt Brush offers a way to intuitively create art in a VR environment, this time using HTC's Vive headset and hand controllers. As the company explains, "Tilt Brush lets you paint in 3D space with virtual reality. Your room is your canvas. Your palette is your imagination. The possibilities are endless." In short, Tilt Brush offers a great way to experimenting with your creativity and just see where it takes you. It's available on Steam (opens in new tab) for £22.99, and you can read more about how the app works here (opens in new tab).03. OKDOTHIS (opens in new tab)Get new ideas for your photography from this community-driven app Taking pictures with your smartphone camera when you're out and about can be a great way to gather fresh creative inspiration. But it's very easy to fall into the habit of photographing the same kind of things over and over again. OKDOTHIS harnesses the power of its social community to get you out of that rut, by providing a 'DO'; a specific idea of what subject to shoot and what mood, topic, theme or attribute to highlight.9 scary effective horror novel covers (opens in new tab)Examples of thought-provoking DOs include: 'Doors that you wish could talk'; 'Epitomize a city in one photograph'; 'Capture a part of your life that isn't glamorous... but make it look glamorous' and 'Photograph a reflection and share it upside down'. It's a great way to get new sense of visual perspective, and the app is completely free.04. Art-Droid (opens in new tab)Get a burst of creative inspiration from the work of famous artists What better way to unlock your creative energies than visiting an art gallery and being inspired by the great artists of the past? Unfortunately, most of us don't live a stone's throw from MoMA or the Tate, but here's an Android app that can provide the next best thing. Art-droid by IliSoftware gives you access to one of the largest collections of fine art available online, with content provided by Wikiart.org. A great way to browse thousands of famous artworks for free.05. Idea Card (opens in new tab)Idea Card gives you 60 prompts to help you generate new ideas Idea Card aims to help you generate new and creative ideas, quickly and easily, via a series of 60 inspirational flashcards. Shake your phone and a random card appears to jolt your thinking and provide a new perspective. The concepts themselves are not revolutionary, but they all come with accompanying text aimed at really getting you to think outside the box. All in all, it's a simple idea but well executed and certainly worth giving a go, especially considering that it's free. If it doesn't work for you, we'd also suggest trying the browser-based app 75 Tools (opens in new tab).06. Impossible Draw (opens in new tab)Power up your creative brain by playing this cool drawing game Another great way to power up your creative brain is to playing a drawing game, and Impossible Draw is one of our firm favourites. An addictive game that will keep you drawing for hours, it's set in a futuristic 3D world where you have to draw a series of symbols accurately in order to travel through an ever-expanding space. You can customize your trips with various game modes, special effects and soundtracks to make every trip a unique drawing experience. There are in-app purchases on offer, but the free version kept us occupied happily for hours.07. Blek (opens in new tab)Let your imagination roam free with this touch-drawing challenge Halfway between a game and a doodling experience, Blek is much easier to use than it is to describe. Described on the site as "an open-ended experience with singular game mechanics and deep, Bauhaus-informed design", it's essentially a way of creating what looks like modern art without realising you're doing so. The goal is to shape a line that collects all coloured circles, avoiding black holes on its route. But unlike other games, it's not about learning the "right" moves, as countless solutions exist; it's more about letting your imagination roam free, and seeing what happens. Blek is available to download from the Google Play Store for £2.49.08. Idea Growr (opens in new tab)Capture your ideas in the moment with Idea Growr Do you have great ideas, but then forget them if you don't write them down instantly? This intuitive app helps you get down your ideas quickly and easily, even when you're busy doing other things. As well as writing ideas and notes, you can upload pictures and record your voice, and share your ideas via apps like Dropbox and Google Drive. It may be a simple idea but it all works seamlessly, it's free and there are no pesky in-app purchases.
